PROGRAM CONNECTION MAP

A tool for turning one activity into a connected program experience

Purpose

The Program Connection Map helps your unit take one major activity and connect it to what happens before it, what happens during it, and what should happen after it.

You are not building the entire program calendar yet. You are practicing connected program thinking with one meaningful activity already on your calendar.

Quick Start Guide

Choose one major activity already on your calendar.

This could be a campout, Pack meeting, service project, recruiting event, fundraiser, Court of Honor, Blue and Gold Banquet, summer camp, high-adventure experience, or another major unit activity.

Then ask three connection questions:

1. What prepares Scouts or families for this?

Use this question to identify what needs to happen before the activity so Scouts, families, and leaders are ready. Think about skills, communication, youth leadership, family expectations, supplies, roles, and anything that would help people participate with confidence.

2. What should happen during this experience?

Use this question to clarify the purpose of the activity. This is not just about filling time. Ask what Scouts should experience, where growth should happen, how leadership can be practiced, and how the activity can strengthen belonging, confidence, or skill development.

3. What should this experience make possible next?

Use this question to think about follow-through. After the activity is over, what should be recognized, reinforced, improved, or carried forward? A connected activity should help prepare the unit for what comes next.

Important Reminders

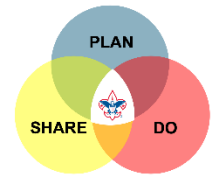

- The goal is not to complete the whole calendar at once.
- The goal is to connect one activity so it becomes part of a larger program experience.

Random Events to Real Program

A connected program begins when one activity starts serving something larger.

Kettle Country Unit Program Connection Map

A calendar shows what is happening. A connected program helps people understand why it matters.
